PREFACE

This little book is a guide to the liturgy of St. John Chrysostom as it is now celebrated in the Eastern Orthodox Church. It is intended to help an English worshipper to learn quickly how to worship with his Eastern brethren. For this reason it is not a complete translation of the liturgy. Many of the prayers are said inaudibly by the priest while the choir is singing. And the ordinary English translations of this liturgy utterly perplex the Englishman who reads them, because he cannot discover what the priest is saying and doing while the choir is singing. In this book enough is printed to give only an outline of what the priest says and does at such times. There are small differences in the service in different countries. The Serbian service is taken as the general basis of this book as being inter mediate between the Greek and the Russian. Russia the anthems are rather longer. And the Greeks have adopted the more modern practice of saying the prayers for the catechumens silently. They also sing "Lord have mercy" once in places where the Slavs sing it thrice.

In all countries of the Eastern Orthodox Church part of the service is hidden from the worshippers

PREFACE

This little book is a guide to the liturgy of St. John Chrysostom as it is now celebrated in the Eastern Orthodox Church. It is intended to help an English worshipper to learn quickly how to worship with his Eastern brethren. For this reason it is not a complete translation of the liturgy. Many of the prayers are said inaudibly by the priest while the choir is singing. And the ordinary English translations of this liturgy utterly perplex the Englishman who reads them, because he cannot discover what the priest is saying and doing while the choir is singing. In this book enough is printed to give only an outline of what the priest says and does at such times. There are small differences in the service in different countries. The Serbian service is taken as the general basis of this book as being inter mediate between the Greek and the Russian. Russia the anthems are rather longer. And the Greeks have adopted the more modern practice of saying the prayers for the catechumens silently. They also sing "Lord have mercy" once in places where the Slavs sing it thrice.

In all countries of the Eastern Orthodox Church part of the service is hidden from the worshippers because it is conducted behind the picture-screen (cikonostasis) in front of the altar. This is simply an Eastern development of the screen of columns and curtains which in more primitive times stood in front of the altar. The principal Eastern Eucharistic vestments, alb, stole, girdle, and chasuble, are in origin identical with those used in the West, though, like them, they have diverged somewhat from the primitive shape.

The holy table is made of wood, and is always vested. It is usual to place two or more candles upon it, and a tabernacle for the reserved Sacrament. A cross is placed upon it or behind it.

The bread for the Eucharist must always be leavened. The wine is mixed with a little cold water, and a little hot water is poured into the chalice after consecration and before communion.

The writer wishes to express his thanks to the Rev. F. E. Brightman for his help in the preparation of this book.
